

The Public Justice Food Project fights for the rights of meatpacking and farm workers by filing lawsuits against companies that violate workers' rights.

If you believe you may have a workers' rights case we should know about, please contact our legal team: foodproject@publicjustice.net

Workplace safety protections regarding COVID-19

We have filed lawsuits fighting for better safety protections at meatpacking plants against COVID-19, such as increased personal protective equipment ("PPE") and social distancing.

Paid sick leave

Many states require companies to provide workers with paid sick leave. In these states, we can sue companies who fail to provide their workers with the paid sick leave they are owed.

Bathroom Breaks

Many employers do not give workers enough breaks to use the bathroom, which can cause harm to workers' health. We can sue companies to change these policies for workers who have special bathroom needs, including women, older workers, and workers with disabilities.

"Points" attendance policies

Many companies use a disciplinary "points" system that punishes workers for missing work, even if they are sick. In some states, these policies are illegal and we can sue to stop them.
